First off, I love anything written by Shannon Ethridge and/or Steve Arterburn. I always take notes when I read books, but with their books I finally gave up. I’d be writing almost every line down. I hope one day to be able to help as many people as these two people have. So, I finally got around to reading "Preparing your Daughter for Every Woman's Battle." This was written in 2005, but I hadn't read it until now. I wanted to preview it before giving it to my teenager to read. First off, love the set up. The first half of the book is written for the mom (or other care giver) to read alone. This half is filled with numerous tidbits on how to do this the right way. My favorite: "When parents are the main source of sex education, children are less likely to be sexually active, they positively identify with parents' traditional sexual values, their first sexual experiences occur at a later age, and the probability of promiscuity is lowered." The second half of the book is for parents and daughters to read together. It is written to the girl. Now, you're asking what age. I know you are. I'm not going to answer that. I firmly believe that every child and situation is different. You are the only one that knows your child and what is going on in your life right now. For some, you might be put in a situation where you need to share with your child earlier than you'd like. For others, you might be able to hold off a bit. May I encourage you though, try to talk to your child before they hear too much from friends. I think it's always better to get ahead of that so your perspective is the first your child hears. This will not (and should not) mean that your child will agree with what you believe, but it's a good way to open up the lines of communication.
